

US agency plans to update auto safety ratings next year

October 16 2019, by Tom Krisher

Credit: CC0 Public Domain

The government's highway safety agency says it plans a significant update to its automobile crash test ratings next year, and it will look at including new technology to make roads safer.

The National Highway Traffic Safety Administration says it will study new test procedures and updates to its star rating system for automobiles, as well as technology that will better protect pedestrians and bicyclists.

The announcement comes a day before a road safety advocacy group planned a press conference to call on the agency to update the safety tests. Advocates for Highway and Auto Safety say the U.S. pioneered the ratings but they haven't kept pace with new technology and have fallen behind other countries.

© 2019 The Associated Press. All rights reserved.

Citation: US agency plans to update auto safety ratings next year (2019, October 16) retrieved 4 May 2024 from <https://techxplore.com/news/2019-10-agency-auto-safety-year.html>

| |
|--|
| This document is subject to copyright. Apart from any fair dealing for the purpose of private study or research, no part may be reproduced without the written permission. The content is provided for information purposes only. |
|--|