

Microsoft competes for popularity with upstart Slack

November 19 2019

Credit: CC0 Public Domain

Microsoft says that its own workplace collaboration service Teams now has more than 20 million daily active users.

That's 8 million more than what upstart work messaging service Slack boasted of having last month. Microsoft is in a fierce popularity contest with Slack.

Slack, which had its initial public offering in June, was in a federally-mandated quiet period when Microsoft first revealed its Teams metrics in early July.

Slack has since gotten louder about downplaying the numbers, saying users are more engaged with its customizable service than "legacy suites of badly connected products"—a thinly veiled swipe at Microsoft.

Microsoft benefits from being able to bundle Teams as part of a software package that includes email and other products.

Slack's shares took a hit after Microsoft's announcement Tuesday.

© 2019 The Associated Press. All rights reserved.

Citation: Microsoft competes for popularity with upstart Slack (2019, November 19) retrieved 25 April 2024 from <https://techxplore.com/news/2019-11-microsoft-popularity-upstart-slack.html>

This document is subject to copyright. Apart from any fair dealing for the purpose of private study or research, no part may be reproduced without the written permission. The content is provided for information purposes only.
