

Colorful T-Mobile CEO leaving, even as Sprint deal not done

November 18 2019, by The Associated Press

---

In this Oct. 28, 2019, file photo, T-Mobile President Mike Sievert answers caller questions during a T-Mobile earnings call in Bellevue, Wash. T-Mobile says Mike Sievert will become CEO in May, following the end of John Legere's contract. The company said Monday, Nov. 18, 2019, that the move is part of its succession plan. Legere will remain with the company as a board member. (Stephen Brashear/AP Images for T-Mobile, File)

T-Mobile said Monday its colorful CEO John Legere is stepping down next year, even as the wireless company's long-running effort to merge with rival Sprint remains unfinished.

Its current president and chief operating officer, Mike Sievert, will become CEO in May after Legere's contract ends.

T-Mobile is trying to combine with Sprint in a $26.5 billion deal. Federal regulators have approved the deal, but attorneys general of 15 states and the District of Columbia aim to block it, saying it will raise prices for consumers. A trial is to start in December.

Legere will remain with the Bellevue, Washington-company as a board member. Sievert has worked at T-Mobile since 2012 and has been a board member for nearly two years.

The company said Monday that the move is part of its succession plan.

Legere joined T-Mobile as its CEO in 2012 and, unlike most telecom executives, has an active social-media presence where he regularly disparages his wireless rivals and promotes T-Mobile as a consumer-friendly wireless company.

"I'm not going anywhere soon. This is all part of a multiyear plan," he wrote on Twitter, where he has 6.5 million followers.

On a call with investors, Legere pushed back against reports that he had been in discussions to be CEO of the troubled office-space company WeWork.

"I was never having discussions to run WeWork," he said Monday.

In this Nov. 7, 2019, file photo, T-Mobile President Mike Sievert, left, and CEO John Legere smile during a press conference in New York. T-Mobile says its colorful CEO John Legere is stepping down next year, even as the wireless company's long-running effort to merge with rival Sprint remains unfinished. T-Mobile's current president and chief operating officer, Mike Sievert, will become CEO in May after Legere's contract ends. (Brian Ach/AP Images for T-Mobile, File)

In this Nov. 7, 2019, file photo, T-Mobile President Mike Sievert answers caller questions during a press conference in New York. T-Mobile says Mike Sievert will become CEO in May, following the end of John Legere's contract. The company said Monday, Nov. 18, 2019, that the move is part of its succession plan. Legere will remain with the company as a board member. (Brian Ach/AP Images for T-Mobile, File)

© 2019 The Associated Press. All rights reserved.

Citation: Colorful T-Mobile CEO leaving, even as Sprint deal not done (2019, November 18) retrieved 20 March 2024 from <https://techxplore.com/news/2019-11-t-mobile-sievert-ceo.html>

This document is subject to copyright. Apart from any fair dealing for the purpose of private study or research, no part may be reproduced without the written permission. The content is provided for information purposes only.