Ryanair on Friday said it was cutting more flights than planned in October, blaming the move on virus-related flight restrictions imposed by governments.

The Irish no-frills airline said "it would cut its October capacity by a further 20 percent in addition to the 20 percent cut already".

The Dublin-based carrier added that it expects its October capacity to now fall to about 40 percent of its level in October 2019.

Ryanair said that "as customer confidence is damaged by government mismanagement of COVID travel policies, many Ryanair customers are unable to travel for business or urgent family reasons without being subjected to defective 14 day quarantines."
