Having trouble working with Google Drive or Google Docs on Monday? You are not alone.

Google says it's investigating issues impacting its productivity services, including Drive, Docs, Google Sheets and Google Slides.

"The affected users are able to access Google Drive, but are seeing error messages, high latency, and/or other unexpected behavior," reads a message on Google's workplace status dashboard Monday.

The tech giant cited similar issues with Docs, Sheets and Slides.

According to Down Detector, a website where users can report issues with online services, the first reports of issues were posted around 8:30 am ET. The most common issues were linked to logging in and apps not loading.
