

YouTube TV wins right to broadcast NFL games starting in 2023

December 22 2022

---

NFL commissioner Roger Goodell (R), seen speaking with a referee before a Los Angeles-Buffalo game September 8, 2022 in California, has welcomed a deal giving YouTube streaming rights to most Sunday games starting in 2023.

The YouTube video platform has won the right to broadcast most NFL football games in the US next year, it announced Thursday, a major win by the Google subsidiary that underscores the growing role of streaming in sports.

Google will pay around $2 billion a year over seven years, US media reported, for the right to broadcast Sunday games on its subscription YouTube TV service, available only in the United States.

YouTube TV subscribers, who now pay $64.99 a month for a viewing package, will have to pay an added fee—as yet undetermined—to view the games, or they can view them on an a-la-carte basis on its YouTube Primetime Channels platform.

They will not be able to see games involving their local teams, which are covered by a separate contract.

Moreover, YouTube TV will not have exclusive rights—the Fox and CBS networks will continue to share some broadcasting rights within the United States.

National Football League commissioner Roger Goodell welcomed the development, saying it ushered in a "new era of how fans across the United States watch and follow the NFL."

For years the NFL has built a growing presence on YouTube, with videos offering game summaries and highlights.

That has allowed the league to reach a younger audience—one that favors short, punchy videos over broadcasts of full matches, which can last three hours or more.

"This partnership is yet another example of us looking towards the future and building the next generation of NFL fans," Goodell said.

The NFL's official YouTube channel currently has more than 10 million subscribers, who regularly watch short videos showing high points from one of the world's most powerful sports leagues.

The NFL wants to further exploit its new arrangement by providing more official content to YouTube and connecting YouTube creators to its events.

The rights being purchased by YouTube TV were previously held by satellite operator DirecTV, which paid the NFL around $1.5 billion a year, according to several US media.

YouTube TV has more than five million subscribers, and hopes the new deal will help it greatly extend its reach.

© 2022 AFP

Citation: YouTube TV wins right to broadcast NFL games starting in 2023 (2022, December 22) retrieved 23 June 2024 from <https://techxplore.com/news/2022-12-youtube-tv-nfl-games.html>

This document is subject to copyright. Apart from any fair dealing for the purpose of private study or research, no part may be reproduced without the written permission. The content is provided for information purposes only.