

France calls for minimum price on European flights

August 30 2023

The heads of low-cost airlines Lauda and Ryanair promoting their summer 2020 Austria routes, which included fares as low as 9.99 euros.

France's transport minister called Wednesday for a minimum price for plane flights in Europe to battle climate change.

Transport Minister Clement Beaune said in an interview with the weekly

L'Obs that he would submit such a proposal to his EU counterparts in the coming days.

"Plane tickets for 10 euros when we're in the midst of the ecological transition, that's no longer possible," Beaune told the magazine.

"That doesn't reflect the price for the planet," he added.

Low-cost airlines made major inroads in Europe by offering rock-bottom fares on some routes, with Ryanair becoming the region's largest airline.

But the low fares sometimes don't cover costs, and flying emits more greenhouse gases than traveling by train.

"I openly call for taxing polluting activities to invest in the ecological transition," said Beaune, adding that the government plans to increase the tax on flights departing France to fund rail investments.

Increased levies on companies managing France's highways and on airline tickets are likely figure in the 2024 budget due to be unveiled at the end of September.

Low-cost airlines have also been a source of controversy in France over their wages and labor practices.

© 2023 AFP

Citation: France calls for minimum price on European flights (2023, August 30) retrieved 10 May 2024 from <https://techxplore.com/news/2023-08-france-minimum-price-european-flights.html>

This document is subject to copyright. Apart from any fair dealing for the purpose of private study or research, no part may be reproduced without the written permission. The content is provided for information purposes only.