

European car sales accelerate to decade-high speed in October

19 November 2019

Volkswagen saying last month that worldwide demand has fallen around five percent.

© 2019 AFP

Despite a ten-year high for October sales European car sales are still down for the year

European car sales hit their highest October level in a decade, an industry body said Tuesday, as the sector recovers from a stall last year over tighter pollution regulations.

The 8.7 percent rise in registration to 1.18 million vehicles "marked the highest October total on record since 2009," said the European Automobile Manufacturers Association.

Year-on-year comparisons are inflated as a number of carmakers had difficulty meeting the stricter pollution WLTP measuring methodology that went into force on September 1, 2018, sending sales more than seven percent lower in October last year.

Over the first 10 months of this year, sales are 0.7 percent lower compared to the same period last year.

A global growth slowdown triggered by trade wars and Brexit uncertainty has hit the car industry particularly hard, with German carmaker

APA citation: European car sales accelerate to decade-high speed in October (2019, November 19)
retrieved 25 January 2022 from <https://techxplore.com/news/2019-11-european-car-sales-decade-high-october.html>

This document is subject to copyright. Apart from any fair dealing for the purpose of private study or research, no part may be reproduced without the written permission. The content is provided for information purposes only.