

Google to resume political ads, easing ban imposed last month

22 February 2021

they could be used "to exploit the event or amplify misleading information."

© 2021 AFP

Google had briefly banned political ads after the January 6 attack on the US Capitol

Google said Monday it would lift its ban on political ads on its platform imposed last month following the turmoil surrounding the violent uprising at the US Capitol.

A Google statement to AFP said the internet giant would from Wednesday lift the ban which was ordered to comply with its "sensitive events" policy.

"We will continue to rigorously enforce our ads policies, which strictly prohibit demonstrably false information that could significantly undermine trust in elections or the democratic process," the statement said.

The prohibition ordered January 13 notably blocked any ads which sought to undermine the credibility of the US presidential election ahead of Joe Biden's inauguration.

The internet giant said at the time it was pausing all political ads along with ads referencing impeachment, President-elect Joe Biden's inauguration or protests in Washington because

APA citation: Google to resume political ads, easing ban imposed last month (2021, February 22)
retrieved 4 December 2021 from <https://techxplore.com/news/2021-02-google-resume-political-ads-easing.html>

This document is subject to copyright. Apart from any fair dealing for the purpose of private study or research, no part may be reproduced without the written permission. The content is provided for information purposes only.